Birds love nuts, but one unsalted almond or walnut every day is plenty for a medium-sized parrot such as an African gray parrot. Larger birds that eat more fat in the wild, such as macaws, may have a few nuts a day, while smaller ones, such as cockatiels and budgies, should be offered no more than a few slivers of almond or a piece of walnut daily.

Shakespeare mentions it only once, very casually, in Troilus and Cressida: - 'The parrot will not do more for an Almond' - 'An Almond for a parrot' being an old simile in his days for the height of temptation. The early English name seems to have been Almande: it thus appears in the Romaunt of the Rose.
