Dark hair, piercing dark eyes and skin that had been burnished by the powerful desert sun. Though he was dressed in a navy blue shirt and khaki pants instead of a dishdasha, he had the look of the desert, that hawklike intensity of a man who lived life on the edge of civilization. She didn't know why, but fear flooded her in waves, liquefying her bones until she couldn't move.

Strangers in the Sahara Desert Marian Wood. Sahara Desert. I'd always wanted to explore the Sahara Desert. For some reason, never-ending sand and dry heat had always appealed to me. I had agonised and planned for this trip for years. Meeting Frank had never been part of my agenda. After my hectic planning, I then got myself lost in London Gatwick.
